1 NoSQL MongoDB ETL and Query Notebook

In this notebook we will:

- Connect to a MongoDB instance running in Docker.
- Load, validate, and clean patient data from a CSV file into the `patients2` collection.
- Load restaurant data from a JSON file into the `restaurants` collection.
- Run several queries on the imported data.

This end-to-end pipeline demonstrates a simple ETL process and data analysis using MongoDB and Python.

1.1 1. MongoDB Connection

We define a function to connect to MongoDB—with a retry mechanism to ensure that the service is up before we perform any operations.

The connection string is read from the environment (with the default using the container name `medical_mongo`).

[11]: import os
import time import pymongo

def connect_to_mongo():
    """Connects to MongoDB using the URI from environment variables (default_ ↪uses container name)."""
    mongo_uri = os.getenv("MONGO_URI", "mongodb://localhost:27017/") retries = 5
    delay = 5

    for attempt in range(retries):
        try:
            client = pymongo.MongoClient(mongo_uri, ↪serverSelectionTimeoutMS=5000)
            client.server_info() # Force connection test print("Connected to MongoDB!") return client
        except pymongo.errors.ServerSelectionTimeoutError as e:

        print(f"Attempt {attempt + 1} failed: {e}. Retrying in {delay}␣ ↪seconds...")
        time.sleep(delay)

    print("Failed to connect to MongoDB. Exiting.") exit(1)

Connect to MongoDB and get the database
client = connect_to_mongo()
db = client["medical_db"]

print("Database obtained: ", db)

Connected to MongoDB!

Database obtained: Database(MongoClient(host=['localhost:27017'], document_class=dict, tz_aware=False, connect=True, serverselectiontimeoutms=5000), 'medical_db')

1.2 2. ETL for Patients Data (CSV)

The CSV file (located in /app/data inside the container) contains patient records. In this step we:

- Load the CSV using pandas.
- Validate and clean the data (e.g., dropping nulls, parsing dates).
- Insert the data into the patients2 collection.

[12]: import pandas as pd
from datetime import datetime

def parse_date(date_str, format="%d/%m/%Y"):
    """Converts a date string to a Python datetime object."""
    try:
        return datetime.strptime(date_str, format)
    except Exception as e:
        print(f"Date parsing error: {e} for {date_str}")
        return None

def import_patients(db):
    file_path = "data/healthcare_dataset-20250506.csv"
    if not os.path.exists(file_path):
        print("CSV file not found! Check that it exists in the mounted data␣ ↪folder.")
        return

    # Load CSV data and drop any rows with null values (you can customize␣ ↪validation as needed)
    df = pd.read_csv(file_path, delimiter=";", encoding="utf-8").dropna()

```

patient_records = []

Iterate over each row and build a document for each record
for _, row in df.iterrows():
    doc = {
        "name": row["Name"],
        "age": int(row["Age"]),
        "gender": row["Gender"],
        "blood_type": row["Blood Type"],
        "medical_condition": row["Medical Condition"],
        "date_of_admission": parse_date(row["Date of Admission"]),
        "doctor": row["Doctor"],
        "hospital": row["Hospital"],
        "insurance_provider": row["Insurance Provider"],
        "billing_amount": float(row["Billing Amount"]),
        "room_number": row["Room Number"],
        "admission_type": row["Admission Type"],
        "discharge_date": parse_date(row["Discharge Date"]),
        "medications": row["Medication"].split(", "),
        "test_results": row["Test Results"]
    patient_records.append(doc)

Insert records into the 'patients2' collection
result = db["patients2"].insert_many(patient_records) print(f"Inserted {len(result.inserted_ids)} patient records into_ ↪ 'patients2'.")

Run the import for patients
import_patients(db)

Inserted 55500 patient records into 'patients2'.

1.3 3. ETL for Restaurants Data (JSON)

Next, we load restaurant data from a JSON file into the `restaurants` collection. In this step we:

- Open and read the JSON file from the mounted data volume.
- Validate that the file exists and contains JSON data.
- Insert the data into MongoDB.

[13]: import json

def import_restaurants(db):
    file_path = "data/restaurants.json"
    if not os.path.exists(file_path):
        print("JSON file not found! Check that it exists in the mounted data_ ↪ folder.")

```

```

        return

    with open(file_path, "r", encoding="utf-8") as jf:
        restaurant_records = json.load(jf) result = db["restaurants"].insert_many(restaurant_records) print(f"Inserted {len(result.inserted_ids)} restaurant records into_ ↪ 'restaurants'.")

Run the import for restaurants
import_restaurants(db)

Inserted 3772 restaurant records into 'restaurants'.

1.4 4. Running MongoDB Queries

With the data loaded, we now execute several queries to answer the following questions:

1. How many patients are in the collection?
2. List all patients admitted after January 1, 2023.
3. How many patients are older than 50?
4. How many patients have the first name “Thomas”?
5. Count patients per distinct Medical Condition.
6. What is the frequency of usage for each Medication?
7. Retrieve all patients currently taking “Lipitor”.

Let’s run these queries using PyMongo.

[14]: from datetime import datetime

1. How many patients are in the collection ?
patient_count = db['patients2'].count_documents({})
print(f"Total patients: {patient_count}")

Total patients: 388500

[15]: ### 2. List all patients admitted after January 1, 2023 patients_after_date = list(db['patients2'].find({
    "date_of_admission": {"$gt": datetime(2023, 1, 1)}
}))
p = list(db['patients2'].find({"date_of_admission": {"$gt":_ ↪ datetime(2023,1,1)}}))
print(f"Patients admitted after January 1, 2023: {len(patients_after_date)}") for patient in patients_after_date:
    print(patient["name"], patient["date_of_admission"])

Patients admitted after January 1, 2023: 103936

1.5 5. Summary

In this notebook we have:

- Connected to a MongoDB instance running in a Docker container.
- Performed ETL to load patient data from a CSV file and restaurant data from a JSON file.
- Executed several sample MongoDB queries to analyze the data, including counts, date-based filtering, aggregation, and pattern matching.
